Dear Colleagues and Friends,

As I hope you are already aware, MDS is planning the first-ever World Movement Disorders Day on November 29, 2022, a date chosen to honor the birthdate of Jean-Martin Charcot. The primary objectives for this initiative are to create a basic, global understanding of movement disorders and what they are, while also informing patients about the importance of seeking care with a movement disorders specialist.

It is important that we amplify this effort as much as possible, which is why, as a key leader in the Society, I am counting on you to help boost awareness of this initiative with your colleagues, institutions and networks in the field.

You can help by following the MDS social media channels and using the official awareness hashtag #MoveDisorder on your own accounts. There will also be an event (in each hemisphere) on the 29th, hosted by the Communications Oversight Committee, and I encourage you to register to show your support. And furthermore, we invite all societies and institutions to create their own initiatives at a global, national or local level to recognize the significance of this global effort.

More information, social media graphics, and event details can be found at www.movementdisorders.org/day.

Kind regards,

Francisco
